LAS VEGAS, N. M., OCT. 10. ED. TIMES:-If I can say anything interesting for the TIMES to lay before its readers you are welcome to it, e cast this into the basket.

It will be hard to say as much as ought to be said of so interesting a country as we are going through. Our party consists of Barker's Views, Frank and Furgeson, citizens of the best summer and winter resort in the United States. Ticket office Leaving the beautifully situated watering place, with the pure, sparkling water gushing out in a hundred different natural rocky nooks, was almost like taking the life-blood from ourselves, knowing we were going to traverse the worst watered country in the world. For my part I felt as though a little could be lost and I'd still have enough left to get home on. But poor Furg., he went to the Springs on a stretcher and now considers himself almost as good as when a boy. But a little talk about the good he could do as an example for our health resort by again being restored to perfect health if he lost it on this trip, cooled him down for a

The trip through Kansas, Colorado and New Mexico was a dry, dusty one. The train of ten coaches of harvest excursionists, crowded to their utmost, was not very flattering. The Arkansas river was in the dryest condition I ever saw it, and of course the irrigating ditches were dry, too. What little water there was in the river has been cut off near the headwaters, and ver, plain that the states which mive gone to a great expense for ditches will always be short of water. How much better a farmer could by going to Northwest Arkansas, where land is cheaper and better and where a never-failing supply of heaven's own rain saves the expense and uncertainty of irrigation. Our crops are far ahead of anything west of Eastern

Having to lay over five hours at Las Vegas, we took the cars on a six mile branch to Hot Springs, the great health resort of New Mexico. The location is very fine and picturesque.

The hotels and bath houses are good. There is a beautiful grass plot and park, with playing fountains, which makes it pleasant and cheerful for the invalid, but the waters are not so varied nor so virtuous as in our own health resort. Everything looks dull and deserted, though, and I learn there are only about a dozen stopping in the place.

While Furg. was taking in a curiosity shop Frank and I took the shadow catcher and went to the hills. We photographed the Valley, that we could have something to assist your

By your neophytes of Neptunc, Your disciples of Diana: By your belles who bet on races, Where would be my homely Hannah?

By you devotees of Browning, Veirdly wild-eved and hombastic: By your sirens so scholastic—
Where would be my homely Hannah
By these females so fantastic?

Where would be my homely Hannah With her brow bedecked with laurel; By your demoiselles of fashion, r beside your wondrous beauties Who surpass the famed Circassian?

Where would be my homely Hannah Were some Countess with her castles, Where of old her noble fathers Fought their feuds and held their wassails, Fain to make me lord and master Of herself and all her vassals?

What though all the saints and angels That the painter e'er depicted-What though all the lovely demons
Who of witchcraft were convicted—
Were alive and all to making Ardent love to me addicted?

I will tell you. Though beside that Little woman I could scan a Score of faces—nay, a thousand— Fair as ever tempted man, a Queen she'd sit enthroned within my Heart, as she does now, my Hannah

DOROTHY'S DIARY.

The Brief and Simple History of a Child's Life.

It was raining dismally, and I stood watching the drops fall wildly down, splashing against the window as they came. A despondent face I had, as I stood there thinking. Oh, the tiresome, dreary day! Oh, for something to pass away the time! I turned and went out of the library and up the broad staircase. We lived in an old house on the outskirts of the city. This old place had been in possession of the family for over a century now. A weather-beaten old rookery it was, but withal the most delightful place to live in, with its broad halls, great winding staircase, and a perfect wonder of a garret extending the whole length of the house.

It was a wonder in more ways than ne. Old property trunks were stowed away against the war, and of relics and fineries of the departed Huntingdons. Old books and manuscripts were piled on queer old chairs and tables, and all sorts of odd, interesting things were to be found

Toward this place I wended my way | do. that rainy morning. Swily I in the garret I shall find something to amuse me; it has never failed me

Up I went till I came to the door. I stood on the threshold a moment. Such a ghostly old place it seemed, with its shadowy corners, and the wild rain without knocking at the windows!

For a second I stood there, half afraid to enter, then, with a laugh at my own foolishness, I walked boldly in.

I poked around among the old chests for awhile, and presently dragged and spindling, and in the key-hole was a tiny, worn, golden key, a faded blue ribbon hanging from it. I turned the key excitedly. It moved just a little hard, as if not liking to disclose the secrets within.

The lid opened and showed numerous little cubby-holes and drawers which were locked, but which I found would open with the same key. By the side of a tiny ink-stand lay a dainty penholder with the initials "D. H. H." cut in it.

I took the key and eagerly opened the first drawer. A book with a golden clasp and the same initials on the cover lay therein. I opened it excitedly-I think without feeling that I might be doing wrong.

My eyes fell on the first page, on which was written, in a man's hand, "To my little daughter." And then, underneath it, in a delicate, childish hand, in faded ink, the words: "The Private Thoughts and Reminiscences of Dorothy Helen Huntingdon," and below, the date:

December 25th, 1730.—Wednesday. I have wanted a diary ever so long in my thoughts, but I did not tell father till he did say to me yesterday: "Well, dear, what will you have on Christmas day?"

"A diary, father, please," said I (only I said dairy. I think I rather got it mixed up with butter and eggs And father did laugh so, and say:

"What! my little girl turn dairymaid?" "Nay, father, a book I mean," and I did feel so foolish at my making such mistakes—a girl of twelve years—on Christmay day. I turned my face away, well-nigh crying.

"Why, what's this?" said father, and he raised my head. "I will bring often come and see me. thee twenty books, but cry not, dear!"

"Nay, father, it is not that, but because I do make such foolish miswith all the laughter gone from his face, took my hand in his and did say to me that this was nothing, only natural that I should make some little mistakes; but it was the great misand pray against

So I did say nothing but --- Ah! when his name he who came to take Pa-I think of it now I blush for shame at my wickedness-but I laughed. And madame did rise up with a most awful look and swept from the room. Then I did feel the blood rising to my face, and my heart seemed like to choke me, and I did leave my chair and go to father's room.

But the door was closed, and it did seem to me that every thing would I never knew it until last night, and now be closed against wicked me. Then I did sit me down outside the door and put my head into my lap so that I would not disturb father writing within. But soon it did seem I could not keep my heart down longer, it choked me so, and father, hearing a sound, came out and found me.

And father brought me in, and I did tell him all, and nothing said he but: 'Little daughter, this is one of the small mistakes that sometimes cause any thing. Then I showed him a little great sorrow." And he did smooth ring that he had given me, that was my hair and take me to madame to ask for pardon, which most graciously she granted. And I now put this down so that I may never, never forget that the small mistakes do sometimes make

And father did seat me on her and say: "I bought this for a friend of mine, a little girl." I think I am most wicked, ever angry and jealous. And I did feel so envious, for I did not want the pony so much myself, and nothing did I say but: "I am very glad for the little girl; I hope she may like it."

At that father did laugh outright and say: "The little maid is not far away; mayhap you know her?"

And then of a sudden it did flash across me that the little girl was my very self, and I did speak out quite boldly and say: "Oh, sir, is it mine?" tather laughingly did say: "Yes, little friend, it is a late Christmas gift and an early New Year one. What will you call her?

The debtor offered and the creditors accepted 20 per cent. in full for their claims, and Hogan was freed from debt. Miss Hogan conducted the business in her own name thereafter. She was prosperous. In 1887 she built a factory at a cost of $30,000, $10,000 of which she borrowed on mortgage. Her father, Patrick Hogan, and two of her brothers (one adopted) were associated with her. It had always been the desire of Mr. Hogan to pay his indebtedness in full, notwithstanding he was not bound to do so legally. He died very suddenly on the 3d of March, 1889, of pneumonia, and it was his dying injunction that his debts should be paid; he left no will. He held a life insurance policy for $15,000. How the Busy Birds Secure Provisions For Winter Consumption. In stripping off the bark, I observed it perforated with holes larger than those which a musket bullet would make, speared with most accurate precision, as if bored under the guidance of a rule and compass, and many of them filled most neatly with acorns. Earlier in the season I remarked the holes in most all the soft timber;

but, imagining they were caused by wood insects. I did not stop to examine or inquire; but now finding them studded with acorns firmly fixed in, which I knew could not have been driven there by the wind, I sought for an explanation, which was practically given me by Captain S--'s pointing out a flock of woodpeckers busily and noisily employed in the provident task of securing their winter's provisions, for it appears that the sagacious bird is not all the time thriftlessly engaged in "tapping the hollow beach tree" for the mere idle purpose of empty sound, but spends its summer season in picking those holes, in which it lays its store of food for the winter, where the elements can neither affect nor place it beyond their reach, and it is considered a sure omen that the snowy period is approaching when these birds commence stowing away their acorns, which otherwise might be covered by its fall.

I frequently paused from my chopping to watch them in my neighborhood, with the acorns in their bills, half clawing, half flying round the tree, and admired the adroitness with which they tried at the different holes. until they found one of its exact caliber, when, inserting the pointed end. they tapped it home most artistically with their beaks, and flew down for another. But their natural instinct is even more remarkable in the choice of the nuts, which you will invariably find sound; whereas it is a matter of impossibility, in selecting them for roasting, to pick up a batch that will not have half of them unfit for use, the most safe and polished-looking frequently containing a large grub generated within. Even the wily Indian, with all his craft and experience, is unable to arrive at any thing like an unerring selection, while in a large bag full that we took from the bark of our log, there was not one containing the slightest germ of decay. They never encroach on their packed stores until all on the surface are covered, when they resort to those in the bark, and peck them of their contents without removing the shell from the holes. -N. Both are divers, and the story of their latest exploit in Monterey is, if true, strange indeed. The men left here in the schooner Rose Sparks to work on the wreck of the Ventura, which went ashore some months ago near Point Sur, a distance of about twenty-six miles below Monterey. They put into Monterey to get a supply of powder, and while anchored in the bay the discovery was accidentally made that they were just over the wreck of some vessel. Baker and Roach donned their diving suits, and were at first little gratified at their discovery, there being but little left of the vessel to ex-They kept digging away at the re-

When the news of finding the wreck spread to the town of Monterey boats of nearly every description put off to the schooner, and the men were surrounded by Frenchmen of all ages and sizes, who had lived in Monterey for years, and many of whom remembered the vessel well. She was a brigantine, they said, and went into said, and port on fire in 1834. All hands abandoned her, the Frenchman said, and were fortunate enough to escape. What made the wreck precious in the eyes of the natives of France, they said, was the fact that, although when lost she was sailing under the Mexican flag, she was in reality the vessel which bore Napoleon from his exile on the Isle of Elba to France. The vessel on which the Emperor and his friends sailed from Elba was a brig and was called the Inconstant. Be this as it may, nothing can shake the faith of the old residents of Monterey from the belief that the Natalia is the original vessel. Those who were rich enough to purchase small bits of copper and iron from Baker did so, and others begged so hard that they were given small specimens, which they carried away in delight and will no doubt treasure as relics of the once loved and great Emperor. They account for the change of name by the fact that the vessel was sold to he Mexican Government -San Francisco Chroniele.

Business and Politics Discussed By Young People of Both Sexes.

Of course flirtations are going on on every side. There is not a girl on hand but who, at the end of the season, would have found her special "affinity." Yet there is such a radical difference between Russian and American flirtation as to make the Russian article almost unrecognizable to the American. Social life in Russia-even in large centers of population-is cast on such lines as constantly to throw the men and women together; family men are in the habit of bringing their unmarried friends to their homes. Here social and business questions, as well as politics, all such topics as are considered of interest to men alone, are freely discussed in the family circle-mostly over the tea-table. The girls, as well as the women, get to be thoroughly versed and interested in the most serious of life's problems, and, as occasion offers, turn out splendid helpmeets to men in all their undertakings. No matter what social or political question is brought uppermost by the times, it is thoroughly discussed in the presence of women, and the men's course frequently is modified according to the women's suggestions. So, in their flirtations. then, the younger the two kindred spirits, the more they vie against each other in stringing up their talk to the most serious topics; their idea is that love may make them womanish and handicap their usefulness in their chosen sphere of action. As soon, however, as a couple of lovers come to an understanding they begin to lay plans for a life's work in common. The futurn does not appear to these enthusiasts in any other form than that of a wide field of duties toward their lower, oppressed brethren. A Russian girl of liberal tendencies scorns the idea of being "supported" by her husband. And again, it would be difficult to find young people in Russia nowadays who would be willing to pledge their love to one another "forever and ever," as was the custom of sentimental lovers of former times. Their acknowledged ambition, how ever, is to be "honest" before any thing else, and they promise to deal fairly with each other, and not to treat each other, with rechauffe sentiment when there is nothing else to offer. When the ardor of love gives out they are prepared to remain true and fast friends. It is understood nevertheless that, were a stronger, unconquer able passion to assert itself in either of the two for another, then the ethics of the young "Intelligencia" would command the unloved husband or wife to commit a peculiar kind of hari-kari —giving his or her partner to liberty of choice. Not long since still stranger ideas were popular among the educated Russian young people. DANCING A HOE-DOWN.

How Edwin Booth Played the Banjo For

Stuart Robson, the comedian, who plays Bertie in the "Henrietta" so cleverly, and has got an equally great success in the "Arrant Knave," is an inimitable story teller, and frequently is in the mood to indulge his propensity to the limit. The other night he quietly sat himself down after the performance with a few friends to enjoy an hour or two of social intercourse after the play. Stories and lively badinage was the result.

"Who would think," said he, "that Edwin Booth was a good banjo player. and that he fingered the strings when a young man for his father and Edwin Forrest to dance? He told me the story himself and it runs in this way: He used to travel with his father, play small parts and look after the great actor's wardrobe. Edwin was very fond of picking the banjo and his father was very fond of listening to it. One night he was sitting in his room strumming away while his father sat listening. The elder Booth was always a little shy of Edwin Forrest, and would not for the world have had the great tragedian see him in any thing but a dignified mood. But he was nicely caught on one occasion. Edwin was playing the banjo and his father was enjoying it, when a knock came to the door.

"'Come in,' said the elder Booth. rather gruffly, when the door opened and in strode Edwin Forrest.

"'How are you, Junius?' said he to the father. 'How are you Ed?' said he to the son

"The father arose, shook hands with Mr. Forrest, and at the same time motioned Edwin with his hand to put the banjo away.

"'No, no,' said Mr. Forrest, 'no, no -I like to hear ita' "Both resumed their seats.

"'Can you play "Old Zip Coon?" said he to Edwin.

The young Booth began playing the tune. When it was finished Mr. Forrest asked for half a dozen familiar plantation melodies, and Edwin played them. Finally he struck the air of an old Virginia hoe-down. The elder Booth began keeping time with his foot, and so did Mr. Forrest. Very soon the feet of both the great tragedians began to move in a half-way shuffle, and finally, as the full spirit of the music caught them, both began to dance the familiar steps which the music provoked.

"The harder Edwin played the more vigorous the steps of the two tragedians, and the frolic continued until all were tired."-N. Y. Mail and Ex-

It is remarkable, though, how these young sprigs of nobility, many of them, take to the hard work of the farm. They have true British grit about them, and the managers have sense enough to have the drudgery and dirty work done by hired men. The boys ride the horse rakes, drive the mowing machines, learn to run a thresher, plow, etc., and all of them take kindly to the care of live-stock, the horses especially, though a propensity to race the latter at every opportunity has to be guarded against. The "instincts of gentlemen" do not seem to desert them either, for they will never sit down to eat in the clothes they have worked in and they refuse to eat with the farm hands who bring the smell of stables to the table. Bathing, shaving and dressing for the evening take up a good deal of their time-indeed, "waste it," real farmers would say-but the boys insist on it. They also cling to their cigarettes. Many of them get to like the life, so that they stay longer than their parents insist on, but nearly all return gladly when the term of their banish-. ment is over. ### Didn't Like the Milk.

A London Bishop had gone down into the country to visit a charitable institution, into which poor lads had en wrafted from the east end of London, and in addressing them he congratulated them upon the delights of their new residence. The boys looked unaccountably gloomy and downcast and the Bishop kindly asked:

"Are you not comfortable? you any complaints to make?"

At last the leader raised his hand. "The milk, my Lord."

"Why, what on earth do you mean? The milk here is tenfold better than you ever had in London.

"No, indeed, it ain't," cried the boy. "In London they always buys our milk out of a nice, clean shop, and herewhy, here they squeeze it out of a beastly cow."-Tid-Bits.

THRILLING ADVENTURE.

A Man Has a Lively Time in Putting a Noose Over an Alligator's Nose.

The following are the particulars of an adventure H. Abbott, of indigo and racing fame, met with soms years ago, says the Naval and Military Gazette:

"It was in the rains, and we were up Tewarreh factory vats, when the jamadar told us that there was a huge alligator under the bridge of the river. Sending for a gun and a couple of bullets, we went to the bridge and, sure enough, about twenty yards off, there was an enormous 'ghurral,' some twenty feet long, with his head just visible abave the water. A well-directed shot caught him between the eyes, and the brute, mortally wounded, plunged into deep water, rolling over and over and was carried by the tide down toward the bungalow, which was a quarter of a mile off. Running to the vat-house Abbett seized a long rope lying there and rapidly made a slip knot in it, and, declaring that he was not going to lose so lovely a skin, kicked off his boots, and just as he was-in socks, breeches and shirt-jumped into the river, giving me and a lot of natives the other end of the rope to hold. He got well into the middle of the stream and was quietly treading water while we were anxiously watching, when suddenly within two feet of the swimmer the alligator plunged straight up out of the water snout foremost, as alligators generally do when hit in the head. Without the least hesitation Abbott flung both arms right around the snout, and a regular rough-and-tumble ensued. "Presently the brute's whole body appeared. Abbott calmly mounted him, evidently trying the while to disengage the slip-knot, which had now got tight round his own arm, and to shove it over the brute's head. Then the alligator started swimming and we followed down the bank, when, just as we were opposite the bungalow, he pulled dead up, brought his tail out of the water, and with a fearful side sweep capsized Abbott, snapping at him as he fell. Then came another fight such as I never wish again to see, the pair eventually disappearing beneath the water. We hauled away at the rope, thinking it was still attached to Abbott, when unexpectedly we saw him come up a few yards from the bank, evidently almost senseless. A Rajpoot peon jumped in and dragged his master up the slope. He was bleeding awfully and was a grewsome sight—shirt in ribbons, arms and chest torn all over, both hands badly maimed. and the right foot completely crushed. He came to at once, and only said: 'The rope's safe over his nose.' And so it was, sure enough, for the natives to whom I had thrown the rope were now busily engaged in hauling the defunct saurian on shore. and, to add to the horror, down to the wits with terror. While she was were carrying him to the house he started singing, 'Home they brought her warrior dead.' A nice time we had out in a jungle, with no appliances to tie the severed arteries, and with a patient who would insist on trying to country was under water, and they refused to budge from home; so we put him into a shampony and took him to a doctor at Mozufferpore, taking from ten on Tuesday till seven the next morning to do the twenty miles.

ALL ABOUT FILES.

How to Select and Use Them-Valuable Practical Suggestions.

To choose a flat file, turn its edge upward and look along it, selecting one which has an even sweep from end to end, and having no flat places or hollows. To choose a half-round file, turn to the highest points of the building. the edge upward, look along it and select that which has an even sweep and no flat or hollow places on the half- The wire may be supposed to instre round side, even though it be hollow in the length of the flat side.

In draw-filing, take short, quick strokes, which will prevent the file from pinning and scratching. Long strokes, no matter how long the work may be, are useless, save to make scratches. Remember it is less the number of strokes given the file than the weight placed upon it that is effective; therefore, when using a rough file stand sufficiently away from the work to bring the weight of the body upon the forward stroke. New files should be used at first upon broad surfaces since narrow edges are apt to break the teeth if they have the librous edges unworn.

Eer brass work use the file on a broad surface until its teeth are dulled, then make two or three strokes of the file under a heavy pressure upon the edge of a piece of sheet-iron, which will break off the dulled edges of the teeth and leave a new fibrous edge for brass work.

Use bastard-cut files to take off a quantity of metal of ordinary hardness; second-cut in fitting, and also to file unusually hard metal; smoothing to finish in final adjustment or preparatory to applying emery cloth; dead smooth, to finish very fine work; float file on lathe work.

To prevent files from pinning, and hence from scratching, properly clean them, and then chalk them well.— American Artisan.

Lightning Rods For Farmers.

Prof. Henry in the Western Farmer says: "I should say that a common two-strand, galvanized barb-wire, well put up, is superior to many of the rods as put up by 'agents' at great cost. If one intends to use barb-wire it would be better to twist half a dozen strands into one than use a single wire. Havng done this, bury the lower end of the wire in moist earth, digging if possible down to water; or, all the better, running the wire int below the water. Without a good ground connection the wire may be more than useless. Having the wire properly 'planted,' attach it firmly to the building every two or three feet by common staples, just as you would to the posts when using the wire for fencing. The common practice of using glass thimbles for insulators to keep the rods away from the building is altogether wrong; agents no doubt use this plan to add to the expense and mystify people. Carry the wire and let it rise several feet vertically, supported by a staff raised to the roof. safety for a distance in every direction equal to its height above the building.

Since the recognition that in many diseases the infective principle is particulate, the possible means of conveyance of the virus from one to another individual have widened. Attention has lately been recalled to the part which may conceivably be played in this direction by the agency of the house-fly. The granular ophthalmia of the shores of the Nile-a true plague of Egypt-has been shown to be propagated through this medium, and, also, that the bacillus tuberculosis may exist in the intestines of flies which have been feeding on phthisical sputa. Indeed, it would appear that there is hardly any direction, eithour mode of living, eating or environment, whereby we can avert the spilling of the transferse. sibility of the transference to ment, whereby we can avert the sibility of the transference to selves of this ubiquitous bacillus, and life would become intolerable were it not for the well-grounded belief that not for the well-grounded belief that phthisis is not dependent for its deveopment upon this microbe solely, but upon the concurrence of man, tions of almost, if not quite, as much tions of almost, if not quite, as much importance as its implantation ir body. Apropos of flies, howeve. has been stated that the lament'd Father Damien attributed his lepro to the inoculation, through the agency, of an abrasion in the scalp.
