or neglect of the very men select ed and chosen to preserve its majesty and to give it at least a fighting chance for its life in the court.

We are not willing to pillory anyone before the public because that is unlawful and is never fortified by moral courage. However, the statute of limitations will have expired as to some offenders before the August term of court, and therefore it would seem that their cases would merit consideration.

Appearances are sometimes deceptive and misleading and it may therefore be improper to inquire into these cases, but better to let them languish and die by the friendly offices of the statute of limitations.

It is nevertheless unfortunate that one man's name appears in the regular panel of the present grand jury, and another at the head of the list of alternates, who has served on the grand jury since August 1907. Furthermore it is common property that these men have identified themselves with the interests of a man, whom a disinterested public conclude, after reading the receiver's report, should be made to face a trial jury. One of them is also a director in the Central Bank which per se does not militate against him but subjects him to criticism and it is believed by many reputable citizens that a mild regard for the standard of genuine manhood would induce them to serve as grand jurors only after their request to be excused had been denied.

There are more than a thousand men in this judicial district of Carroll county capable, honest and therefore acceptable who have not been summoned as grand jurors within three years last past.

The demands of justice and the interest of the public welfare unite in proclaiming that their elimination will be hailed as an omen of good.

Mr. and Mrs. Mullen Entertain

Thursday evening of last week Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Mullen entertained a number of neighbors at their hospitable home on Tower Heights. The evening was spent most pleasantly with conversation and games.

The most exciting if not the most instructive game played was "Pit." As the game grows in interest the players take on much the same attitude and frame of mind that the traders on 'change do, consequently the game has a tendency to furnish considerable hilarity.

The hostess served a delicious luncheon and the guests turned their faces homeward at a late hour carrying with them memories of a pleasant occasion.

of 90 acres, and he has already refused $2,500 for this year's crop. Last year he realized about $2,000 from four acres of apples of the Duchess variety, after paying all expenses of gathering, spraying and cultivating. This year he expects big things from his orchard, as it is in fine condition.

This is only one of the many fine orchards near Rogers. More than 6,000,000 apple trees have been put out in this county, and more than two-thirds of them are bearing. New comers from many states are seen here every day, and all are enthusiastic over the fruit industry, fine climate and excellent water.

Meters to Conserve Supply

The question of water supply for our cities and towns is discussed by H. H. Windsor in the February Popular Mechanics. He calls attention to the following important facts:

"In the large cities of Europe regulations strictly enforced reduce the daily consumption to figures which to our extravagant mode of life seem impossible here. For instance, the total amount of water, for all purposes, consumed daily in Berlin is only 18 gallons for each person, while New York is using 135 gallons and Chicago 200 gallons. Berlin is metered; New York and Chicago meters only the large consumers. It has been claimed that a reduced water consumption, or rather pumpage, would increase the death rate, but on this score the death rate is 20 per cent higher in New York than Berlin, and the typhoid mortality three times as great. The comparison may not be entirely fair, as conditions of climate, quality and nature of food sanitary regulations, milk supply and other things may have some bearing, but not sufficient to account for the entire difference. While consumers naturally protest against the meter system, it is evident no other system will isfactory. The public generally and the "fishing fraternity" particularly will appreciate Mr. Butt's activities along this line.

It might not be out of place just here to call attention to the fact the numerous and flagrant violations of the fish law are reported from time to time. Are there of ficers is Carroll county whose duty it is to look into these matters? If so they should get busy or resign and give a worthy man a chance.

Miners' Strike Impends

Indianapolis, Ind., Jan. 30.—One of the greatest industrial battles in the history of the United States impends in the belief of the leaders of the United Mine Workers of America. The convention of the organization which has been in session here for two weeks will adjourn tomorrow night, and it is probable that a majority of the 1100 delegates immediately will depart for Toledo for the joint conference with the bituminous coal mine owners of western Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana, which will open Tuesday.

This conference is specifically for the purpose of negotiating a wage contract for these districts to go into effect April 1. But as the tristate contract is to be the basis of uniform contracts in all other districts of the United States and Canada, it may be determined to morrow that most or all of the soft coal miners' representatives assembled here should take part in the conference at Toledo.

The sentiment in the National Miners' Union is unanimously for a general strike if the operators refuse an increase in wages of at least 10 per cent.

Intends to Retire
Little Rock, Ark., Jan., 29.—Relative to a report in circulation that Gov. Donaghey would be a candidate for United States senator in opposition of Senator Jeff Davis, the governor today authorized the statement that he had not given the question a serious thought, as it is his intention to retire from politics after he leaves the governor's office. "Under no circumstances could I be induced to enter the race for United States senator," said the governor.

he said:

"Come, let me show the place where I found Lettice Grammont."

His bewitched listener followed him in a dream, walking on air, enchanted. Hatless, they both slipped out from the terrace into a little park, Tempest leading, and suddenly she found herself in what went for a bit of woodland. At the side of a meadow-brown brook upon whose well-like water the trees had sent barques of withered leaves to be whirled and destroyed. Tempest said:

"Stand there, please, where you are, by that birch."

Miss Carew obeyed the fancy and stood motionless, whilst filtering down upon her one by one the flecks and circles of sunlight fell through the leaves, dancing on her brown hair and her brown dress.

Tempest, his brows knit, but his expression radiant, watched her smiling.

"Do you by any chance remember the book, Miss Carew?"

"Oh, well."

"And you liked it?"

His tone was almost timid, he waited with suspense for her response.

It struck her as curious that her opinion about a work already translated into four languages and whose merit was a household word should be asked.

"Like it!" she exclaimed, and he was answered.

He crossed the brook from her, extended his hand, and helped her over.

"I am glad," he said fervently.

Luncheon had followed in a small breakfast-room whose air was domesticity and intimacy—a faultless meal, faultlessly served, the light rioting in the reflecting surfaces of glass and silver, and dazzling on the cloth.

It was past three when Miss Carew found that she had made the tour of Craven under the guidance of the host himself.

"I must go, Mr. Tempest."

"Nonsense!" he exclaimed impatiently. "What for, pray?"

"In an hour my train leaves for London."

"What train of yours? You have no time, no destination—have you—other than this one spot of the old world? What is waiting for you in London?"

To his direct query, made testily and sharply, she did not reply, but simply held out her hand to him in good-by.

He did not refuse to take the hand, which in his felt prisoned.

"You have been amusing yourself. I see—this has been a little jaunt from London, to what you have made in your romantic mind a shrine? I have made myself ridiculous in taking it seriously."

She withdrew her hand and colored at his tone.

"I have told you quite the truth, Mr. Tempest. I sail to-morrow."

"Without your essay?"

"I must, since you refuse."

"But I don't!" he interrupted. "It happened at first, then with embarrassment. Her observation of the details of the room, an inventory of the books, was long over before he came full of apologies.

"I have been walking your 12 miles and more, otherwise I could not have seen you to-day, much as I wanted to. I had a bad spirit with me for company, but I tired him out, left him in a field, and I have come back alone."

His voice was joyous and fresh, his face full of animation and as he frankly took her hand between both of his she was a prisoner held by an irresistible force. When he let her hand go it was with an abruptness which not only let her free but put her, as it were, away from him. He asked her if she were comfortable at Mrs. Ramsdell's, if her boxes had come in season, and so glanced at her appearance. It should have satisfied even a tyro in women's habiliments, for from shoes to hat Miss Carew was faultless in her simple toilet.

"You have taken up the most difficult profession in the world," he said. "I say 'taken up,' if you're forced to it—cursed to it—by temper and talent, that's one thing; but to write simply, for example, as a profession, why, it's slavery! Do you," he demanded curtly, "write well?"

"No," she confessed at once.

"Of course you don't!" he accepted with satisfaction. "You couldn't—why should you? You lack the essentials. D'abord le feu sacré—you've not got that—experience and more misery than happiness—but both, mark you! both are indispensable, and you—"

he paused and scanned her face with the intensity which whilst it fascinated her made her shrink.

"—you have had neither."

Without demur, and an evident distaste to prolonging the personal theme, she said:

"May I begin to make my notes, Mr. Tempest?"

He smiled. "Will you sit there at my table?"

He put the chair in place, drew before her paper and a choice of pens, ink, and sharpened pencils, left her side and went round in front of her, where he sat down facing her, closing his eyes and folding his arms across his breast.

"Write," he commanded, "what I dictate, please, as fast as you can."

In a low and measured tone, as if every word were a pearl and he weighed it, as if every phrase were a jewel which he held up to see its quality, Tempest began to compose. Not in verse, but in an even, sonorous prose as rich as it was free from mannerism and ambiguity.

FARM AND FIELD

Hints For the Farmer and Stockman

Putting Away Tools

The wearing out of farm implements is as a rule, due more to neglect than to use. If tools can be taken care of, it will pay to buy those made of the best steel, and finished in the best manner; but in common hands, with common care, such are of little advantage. Iron and steel parts should be cleaned with dry sand and a cob, or scraped with a piece of soft iron, washed and oiled if necessary, and in a day or two cleaned off with the corn-cob and dry sand. Finally, paint the iron part with rosin and beeswax, in the proportion of four of rosin to one of wax, melted together and applied hot. This is good for the iron or steel parts of every sort of tool.

Wood work should be painted with good, boiled linseed oil, white lead and turpentine, colored any desired tint; red is probably the best color. Keep the cattle away until the paint is dry and hard, or they will lick, with death as the result. If it is not desired to use paint on hand tools, the boiled oil, with turpentine and "liquid drier" does just as well. Many prefer to saturate the wood-work of farm implements with crude petroleum. This cannot be used with color, but is applied by itself, so long as any is absorbed by the pores of the wood.

For the Good of Arkansas

Arkansas farmers are making a good thing out of hogs, and are finding that good stock means good money. At prices now ruling in the market, an eight-months old hog, if of good blood will bring $18, for it will weigh 225 pounds and sell at 8 to 8 1/4 cents a pound. Mind you, we say hogs of good blood. A grub of that age will weigh 75 to 100

See the difference?

At Fort Worth, Texas, is held every March the greatest fat stock show in the United States, outside of Chicago. A good many leading stock-breeders of Arkansas are among the directors of this show, because they realize the need of better farm stock in this state, and they believe that the best way to teach a farmer the advantage of raising better farm animals is to let him see what can be done. We believe it would be greatly for the good of our farmers if they would take a few days off and go to this great Southern live stock exposition, and study the work of the successful breeders. It is held March 14th to 19th, and specially low railroad rate will be given.

Keep Hammering Away

I know a young farmer who has been doing splendid work on the old place, rigging up the buildings and making things shine everywhere. Makes the eyes of the neighbors stick out; they say things, too. Does the young man care?

"I know they think I am trying to do something big. They don't say that to me, but I feel it. They don't worry me; I am going to keep hammering away."

That's fine. Keep hammering away.

The man who does that will surely have something to show for his work some day for it is keeping right at it that counts.

Have you been a bit discouraged about your progress lately? Keep hammering away. There will be a change pretty soon. Your work will begin to count; crops will be better; prices will give you a margin.

Are you busy making improvements on your farm while the other folks send their money to the bank? Never mind what they do. Make the most of your own; it is the best in the world. Keep hammering away. The day will come when you will have some
